High Impact Practices (HIP)

Cultural Anthropology is a designated High Impact Practices (HIP) course. What this means is that we will be incorporating HIP practices to increase success. In three structured course assignments we will learn and apply anthropological research methods aided by collaborative learning practices and feedback. The assignments will be applied in the course term paper. Our goal is to let students tell their story of why they want to research a social environment and how it defines them. For Cultural Anthropology, we will have two workshops on research methods in anthropology and a presentation of your work on writing assignment two.

HIP practices help students to apply their work after the course ends. They are used here to increase learning of course content through increased discussion, reflection, feedback, and engagement.
